Unethical randomised controlled trial of cervical screening in India: US Freedom of Information Act disclosures

Eric J Suba,¹ Robert E Ortega,² David G Mutch³

To cite: Suba EJ, Ortega RE, Mutch DG. Unethical randomised controlled trial of cervical screening in India: US Freedom of Information Act disclosures. BMJ Global Health 2017;2:e000177. doi:10.1136/bmjgh-2016-000177

This paper has been withdrawn. After acceptance it was inadvertently published online while awaiting legal review. It has now been withdrawn on legal advice. For the official publisher note please see: <http://gh.bmj.com/content/2/2/bmjgh-2016-000177notice>

Received 12 October 2016
Revised 17 February 2017
Accepted 22 February 2017
Published Online First
16 March 2017

CrossMark

¹Kaiser Permanente Medical Center, San Francisco, California, USA

²Arizona Republic, Phoenix, Arizona, USA

³Washington University School of Medicine, Saint Louis, Missouri, USA

Correspondence to

Dr Eric J Suba; eric.suba@gmail.com

Publisher's Note

Suba EJ, Ortega RE, Mutch DG. Unethical randomised controlled trial of cervical screening in India: US Freedom of Information Act disclosures. BMJ Global Health 2017;2:e000177. doi: 10.1136/bmjgh-2016-000177.

This paper has been withdrawn. After acceptance it was inadvertently published online while awaiting legal review. It has now been withdrawn on legal advice.